I can't believe I pulled the trigger. I just killed innocent people who had dreams, goals, and families. I've never been suicidal. I've never been diagnosed with mental issues. I've never been classified as a psychopath. I've never been influenced by video games or movies - even though I've always appreciated weapons and the engineering behind them. I didn't grow up on drugs or alcohol. I didn't grow up in a bad family. I never intended on killing other humans.

Rest in peace to everyone who was in that house - I was too busy pulling the trigger.

You know what's funny? The media is going to portray me as some unstable, overly emotional, crazy lunatic. There's nothing wrong me or the way I think. There's really nothing wrong with me: I have a roof over my head, access to food and resources, a loving family, an amazing job, etc. I'm selfish. That's why I did this.

I used an AR-556. Did I mention how easy it was to purchase an assault rifle? Are you kidding me?

Fuck You

What am I going to do?

I've had so many wonderful people talk to me about my problems with Anna and they've done incredible jobs (killing other people was my idea). From everyone I met during my customer interactions at Apple, I've grown to learn and read people. We had some kind of scale (NPS) where you can track feedback for employees, I left off at 100 or something. That's because I've mastered the art of communication. FTP. Fuck The Population.

So you're probably wondering why I did what I did. Here's an excerpt from another document I was working on:

It was all about a girl named Anna Bui who changed my life. In sophomore year of high school, I met her sitting next to me in an Algebra class. We talked and I quickly realized I fell in love. She on the other hand didn't express any attraction for me and I became sad. I didn't see her my junior year and was hoping to forget her, and it worked. I founded a company that raised over $100K on Kickstarter, pursued development projects with friends, and became a better person overall. Then as I was walking to my first class my senior year, I saw her. A lot of memories and thoughts of me suffering my sophomore year came back to haunt me.

I decided that I needed to do something about this so around November, I had asked her out. We officially started dating on November 21, 2014. Was I happy or what. We dated for a good year and a half until things started tumbling down. I lost track of my life.

I'm the type of person who wanted to make it in life - or "rise up" as my friend would often say. We wanted to change the world and help people in their daily lives. We had started so many projects that changed the way small businesses ran to helping people plan their daily lives in a centralized, minimal journal.

Around May of 2016, I began feeling that Anna started losing feelings for me, as she was so excited for her Europe trip after our freshman year at UW finished. I would have went with her but I needed to save some extra money. I also worried that I wouldn't accomplish everything I wanted to in my life, and I was only 19!!

I made the worst mistake of my life - I broke up with a girl I loved and cared for so much. My actions weren't justified and I wanted both of us to be happy. So anyways, she left on her trip and I went to New York for a few days with my friend. Everything was good. About a month went by, nothing. As soon as she came back though, I couldn't get her out of my eyes. On Snapchat, Instagram, Facebook, Twitter - She was everywhere. With friends, at parties, with those people that I hated because I knew they were wanting to steal her from me when we were dating. She was at parties, drinking and smoking with other guys, my enemies. I was overreacting. I gave it a few days. This shit did not stop. I figured this is how girls get over breakups. Anyways, I removed her from Snapchat, and a few days later, she texted me saying she had blocked me from everything. I was so upset. I texted back and I asked for us to talk since I needed closure.

We met up at an empty parking lot around 11 PM and talked about us. I was mean. I didn't hurt her, but I was pretty cold. I guess there were so many emotions in me that I couldn't control it. I later found out she had already kissed someone and went on dates. And there's nothing I can do about that, we already broke up. But it messed me up. The second day we met up, we went to the beach around 8 PM and talked over food. We later went to my house to originally watch a movie, but we cuddled, kissed, and ...made love. It got to me. When I was driving her home that night around 12 AM she still said she didn't know if we can work things out. She still didn't tell me about who she kissed and what not.

The funny thing is when I woke up one morning, saw her drunk and on another guy's bed, I lost it. I got up, got into my car, and drove around. Eventually I made it to a store called Cabelas. 20 minutes later, I left with an AR-556, Now wait a minute. Let's talk about how easy it is to buy guns. I was shocked. I didn't even have the intention of buying one. They were salesmen, who persuaded me into buying one. I mean I never even shot a gun before. I never went on a range, I never took classes. I just walked out with an Ruger AR-556 and some ammo. It was an impulsive purchase, meaning I didn't think about. I put it in my trunk, and let it sit there. I thought I would NEVER do anything crazy involving shooting people. I never thought I would do it. Especially with all of these mass shootings going on, I felt so bad for innocent dreams being killed because someone couldn't control themselves. Well later I realized that was me.

You know Anna was an amazing person. Nothing could ever justify me for leaving her for ~2 months. I just needed some time to see how life would be without her and wanted her to enjoy her time in Europe without me worrying.

This incident wasn't influenced by ANY friend, ANY family member, or ANY employee that works with me at Apple. This wasn't even Apple's fault. The people I work with at Alderwood are truly amazing and have always welcomed me with warm feelings. My family has always been there for me and supported me. I cannot believe I let them down.

I just left work to finish this and go to Cabela's to buy a few more accessories. I've never fired a gun before so this is going to be a learning experience. Is this the right thing to do? Of course fucking not. Never, ever, ever, ever, in a trillion years. Taking lives is insane. This is like my early retirement. I'm giving up on solving things. I'm a loser. I quit.

Below I made a list of people who were pretty close to me before this incident. They never knew about this. This won't even be news since mass shootings are so common now. I hope my parents won't care too much about this, I was always down on them. I was pretty disrespectful to a lot of people in my life but I think that originated from having a careless attitude. But wait a minute, I care a lot about some things. I truly care a lot. This might be my last night. If it is, then I'm ending this here. If it's not, then I'll add something else and hope that Anna texts me back. So long my dear friends.

Regards,
Allen Christopher Ivanov

Nobody on this list is to be accused, searched, or questioned. They had nothing to do with anything.

Anya Ivanov (Mother): I wish I was everything you wanted. You're such a strong, independant woman who knows exactly what she wants and where to get it.

Dimitri Ivanov (Father): I wish I could have helped you around the house more. I looked up to you because you had a solution for everything. I asked too many questions when we worked together and I figured you became tired of answering them. I never wanted to stop learning. Sorry for breaking promises.

Yelena Abramyan (Grandmother): You were nothing but an angel.

Ruben Shakhnazarov (Grandfather): We fought a lot. Your open mind is what keeps people debating. Never stop thinking and questioning.

03B Child witness (Cousin): We took different roads when we grew up. I wish we talked more. You're an amazing person - sorry if I never told you.

Christene Oganov (Cousin): I wish I was there to help you more. Thanks for being so supportive. I remember punching you in the eye during Russian class several years ago and I'm sorry. I still think about it.

Elina Abramyan (Aunt): Such a hard working woman. I loved your energy during family dinners and parties. I wish we talked more.

Lilya, Edward, Emil, and Elona Sanamyan: Nothing but warm and supportive. Lilya and Edward - thank you for always being there for me. Emil - whether it's in Washington or Washington D.C., you always came through and helped me. Elona - thanks for being so cool with me and keeping my mother laughing.

Gayana Healy: We never got into deep conversations but it meant so much when you offered to teach me how to drive manual on your BMW. You're an amazing person.

Jessica Irby: I hope to see you up there one day. You never quit anything. I love you - thanks for growing up with me.

Gregory Fayerberg: My brother from another brother. All I can remember are the laughs and jokes we made. Hope the world will be in your hands one day. You're extremely blessed for having amazing parents.

02J Witness - endanger physical safety: There's really nothing to be said here. We both know you're going to change the world. You never gave up on me and helped me through everything. Nothing but positive vibes. You're a real ride-or-die. Live a rich nigga life - I'm just being honest.

Ibrahim Pasha, Richard Rice, Emanuel Moges, James Guan, Gabriel Restack, Joel Sandjong: Talented group of people. We always had passion to invent and come up with new ideas. I hope we think of more in the next life. Emanuel - I wish you stayed and talked to us more. You were the star in our conversations. James - I'm sorry about that girl. Don't make the same mistake I made.
